Companies in this industry plan, design, and manage the production of visual communications involving graphic art and illustrations. No major companies dominate the industry.

Regional economic activity drives demand, because most graphic design firms are small and work locally. The profitability of individual companies depends on accurate bidding, timely delivery of projects, and a steady volume of work. Large companies have advantages in marketing and sales, breadth of services, delivery of complex projects, and supporting ongoing contracts. Small companies can compete effectively by responding more quickly, adopting new trends, and specializing by services or markets. Major industry services are corporate and organizational image services (25 percent of industry revenue); advertising creative services (25 percent); website design and development (15 percent); publication design services (10 percent); and commercial illustration design services (5 percent). Some firms also offer other specialized, professional design services, and some sell merchandise. The industry has evolved from producing only graphical images to providing more extensive design services.
